TWENTY contestants will feature in the 2013 Miss World Supermodel Pageant come Saturday following the arrival of Miss South Africa yesterday.

When this edition went to press last night, there was also word received by the organising committee that two Philippine contestants might not make it following the cancellation of their flights.

But all is on the roll, says World Supermodel Pageant president Gavin Dolley.

Assigned into different groups, the contestants did their glamour and underwater photo shoots, snorkelling and kayaking activities and film interviews yesterday.

"The photoshoot went very well, the underwater shoot was very challenging but the girls were very good under water," Mr Dooley said.

"So the feedbacks we are getting are absolutely amazing and we have Belgium (contestant) commenting on the palm tree, she hasn't seen a palm tree before and she was constantly taking pictures of the palm tree.

"We are getting constant feedbacks. Fiji is A Class and this is something hotels in Fiji should be looking at.

"Fiji is putting on a spectacle for them (visiting models) and these are memories they can't buy."

Today, the contestants will rehearse for the crowning ceremony before continuing with the photoshoots and other activities, including film interviews, tomorrow.
